On Idle Shores

OPERA GALLERY

André Brasilier.

OPERA GALLERY

Foreword

André Brasilier's life on canvas has spanned over sixty years; a career that began in the 1950s at the École des Beaux-Arts and has since included major retrospective exhibitions in France, Japan, and the Hermitage in St. Petersburg. With a prolific oeuvre and a style eluding classification, Brasilier is among France's most important and distinguished living contemporary artists.

It is with great delight that Opera Gallery presents a touring exhibition through Asia and The Middle East in celebration of the esteemed artist's life and work. Over the course of three months Opera Gallery will host three exhibitions in Seoul, Dubai and Hong Kong that illustrate the artist's most notable themes as a wanderer and observer of life's subtle simplicities. Set against quintessentially romantic backgrounds, Brasilier's paintings reflect the contemplative self-awareness that renders his work universally accessible and fundamentally humanist.

The nature of a traveling exhibition provides new contexts with which to learn and engage with a body of work. One of Brasilier's most essential achievements has been his ability to conjure a wordless, intercontinental language seamlessly infused with his own independent spirit. It is this skill that rests at the core of this touring exhibition, evoking variations and reflections that exceed time and location. His perennial sensitivities and mystical compositions have won him numerous awards throughout his career, and positioned him as a highly collectable artist worldwide.

Opera Gallery is thrilled to bring to you this inspiring collection of paintings, including more than twenty new pieces straight from the artist's studio, in a retrospective look at the timeless harmony of art.

Interview

There is a pastoral sense to your paintings, reminiscent of a bygone age, which provides the viewer with a reprieve from the bustle of modern life. Do you see your work as representative of a need to return to moments of quiet contemplation?

A painting is above all “an artistic phenomenon”, as Georges Braque so appropriately pointed out. This artistic phenomenon is my priority. To strike the perfect balance between an abstract composition and human emotion, that’s my ideal.

If my style seems somewhat incongruous in these tormented times, it nevertheless is the quite natural and artistic translation of my emotions.

Your art seems rooted in great personal emotion. Which moments in your life can you say most significantly influenced your paintings?

Among the artistic milestones of my life, I would have to include the “Paul Gauguin Retrospective” at the Orangerie Museum in the 1950s and my encounter with a work of art that so totally enchanted me.

Another life-changer for me was meeting Chantal d’Hauterives, the epitome of beauty and eternal enchantment.

From whom, in your own life, do you derive inspiration?

The love of my life and my love for artistic expression are the reasons why my eyes are constantly wide open, my hand forever poised to paint for posterity. My wife’s exquisite beauty, the charm of the French countryside, the beauty of the skies, such are the ingredients to my inspiration.

What kind of influence did your parents, who were also painters, have on your early works? How did growing up in an artistic household shape the way you see, and ultimately depict, the world around you?

We’re all heirs to something. My artistic parents, both of them extremely spiritual, impregnated with idealism, in the tradition of “painters of the soul”, obviously had a major influence on me.

Your paintings exude a certain poetic harmony that reminds of the elusive quality possessed by music. If you had to choose a poet or musician who best complements your work, who would it be?

Poetry, Music and Painting: all spring from the same source of emotions that have penetrated both heart and soul. It’s difficult to isolate one name, as musical and poetic treasures abound, but here are some names: Mozart, Beethoven or Schubert, Verlaine and Aragon; all artists who penetrated the depths of my soul.

Can you talk about the major themes in your work, namely music, horses, and nature, as well as the more subtle themes reminiscent of Asian painting styles?

The artistic approach is the crux, the quintessence of art. Naturally, “woman”, and mainly my wife, is the theme that best characterizes my work. Landscapes throughout the four seasons, horses in natural or circus settings and music in all of its facets are the themes that inspire me the most.

How did meeting your wife, Chantal, change the way you depicted womanhood and femininity in your works?

As I’ve said, meeting my wife was capital. Her body, her soul entralls my eyes and heart. She is a constant source of inspiration. She has allowed me to penetrate the world’s many nuances. A chemical engineer in the perfume industry, she fills my life’s work with her fragrance.

Do you think painting can be inherently feminine or masculine?

Is painting masculine or feminine? Hard to say. The art of painting requires power and sensitivity. Striking the perfect balance between these two traits is more frequent with men than women.

*Pour traduire une émotion intense, il faut aimer comme un fou.
Tout est question d'amour.*
André Breton.

"To convey an intense emotion, you have to love like crazy. It's all about love."

What are the three things you take with you everywhere you go?

(These three items) Paper, pens and a box of watercolors.

Do you always feel the desire to paint?

I am always painting. And if I'm not in front of a canvas, I have sheets of paper with me to take notes, and to write down ideas that come to me. I will look them up later when I start a new work. Painting is my life.

Do you paint exclusively places you visited?

More and more it is my inner eye that takes precedence, to such an extent that the ensuing inspiration that surges often depicts nature; for larger pieces, the inspiration is usually the fruit of my dreams and meditation.

Loupeigne is a source of inspiration for your work. Are there other important places that you used in your paintings?

An artist's surroundings play an important role. Certainly, Loupeigne has been an inexhaustible source of artistic emotion, but I have also used Anjou, the town of my birth, quite a bit. A painter's roots often allow him to penetrate deeper into his nature.

As a young artist, after your stay at the Villa Medici, you decided to leave and discover the world. What was your spiritual state then, and how did you work?

I did, in fact, want to discover the world. And so, I travelled a great deal around Europe: Holland, Germany, Norway, Sweden, etc. I lived wherever I landed. At the time, I painted straight in front of the subjects. This is no longer the case today: when I see a subject that I find interesting, I take notes and later only transcribe my impressions on the canvas. In my opinion, a painting is a physical object; it must represent an emotion that was born into and from life. In my canvases, I try to create a harmony between the two.

Looking at your biography, it seems Europeans and Americans greatly appreciate your paintings. But the Japanese are equally fans, and yet, their culture is very different from that of the West. How do you explain it?

I think it comes from my way of expressing my thoughts and emotions, my way of using colour, and above all my taste for the ellipse. I am absolutely not a realist painter. I like things to be suggested, and even mysterious. It is my nature to simplify things. I always try to highlight the quintessence of a subject with very little effect, to say a lot with a little, like Japanese artists who focus on asceticism and simplicity. I already had this inclination as a student at the Institut des Beaux-Arts. But above all things, what is important for me is composition. Before making any sketch, I try to compose the painting in my mind. If composition is at the base of all painting, in the end, it must be forgotten or overlooked; the public must not notice it. This is what characterises my painting, and probably what makes it able to reach out to people from different cultures.

Biography

André Brasilier was born into an artistic family in Saumur, France in 1929. His father, Jacques Brasilier, was closely affiliated with the Symbolist movement, joining the atelier of the celebrated Mucha; his mother, Alice Chaumont, was a graduate of the Royal College of Art in London. Brasilier possessed a natural inclination for painting at an early age, and at the age of twenty went to Paris to study at the École des Beaux-Arts. In 1952 he received a grant from the Florence Blumenthal Foundation, and in the following year, when he was only 23, won the Premier Grand Prix de Rome, entitling him to study at the Académie de France in Rome. His first solo exhibition of paintings, focusing on the musical themes that often appear in his works, was held at the Galerie Drouet in 1959. He was a frequent participant in gallery exhibition in Paris throughout the 1950s and 1960s.

Over the years Brasilier has exhibited in numerous exhibitions all over the world including France, Germany, Japan, Switzerland, Canada, United States, Russia, The Netherlands, Korea and Hong Kong - over one hundred solo exhibitions in eleven different countries. His travels have inspired several series of paintings, as well as ceramics, mosaics, theatrical sets and book illustrations that have peppered his illustrious career. He had his first retrospective of one hundred artworks from 1950-1980 at the Château de Chenonceau in 1980 and a retrospective exhibition at the Musée Picasso - Château Grimaldi in Antibes, the French Riviera, in 1988. He has since been honoured with major retrospectives both at the Russia's renowned State Hermitage Museum in Saint Petersburg in 2005 and at the Museum Haus Ludwig für Kunstaustellungen Saarlouis in Germany in 2007.

While Brasilier's works reflect the influences of expressionist artists and Japanese prints, he has retained a personal style of schematized nature and imagery that makes him an anomaly in the contemporary Zeitgeist. His subdued works often feature themes and motifs of horses, nature, music and women, provocative in their timelessness and emotional subjectivity. Set against the most simplistic and romantic backgrounds, the artist effortlessly transports us into surreal landscapes, lightening the soul with dreamy infusions of figures set in modest hues of colour, shape and form. In an intimate communion with nature, Brasilier draws his inspiration from its language, sounds and colours, reminding us of a natural beauty untouched by daily trivialities and events.

Brasilier's work resists formal dissection and analysis. Flirting with expressionism, abstraction and even the decorative qualities of Edo Japanese prints, whichever 'ism' is ascribed to Brasilier's work seems entirely the necessity of a definition-soaked society; precisely what his paintings seem to be directing us away from. Infused with spirituality yet striking in their somber appreciation of the universally symphonic, Brasilier's works are as much inaccessible to the instruments of modernism as they are perfectly suited to the contemporary search for harmony.

Brasilier's paintings do not attempt to imitate form, but rather express the emotion that lies at the core of human intimacy and experience. As once explained by Bernard de Montgolfier, "one could say that Brasilier has a very personal way of being non-figurative within figuration". Indeed, Brasilier strives to make the invisible visible again, opening the viewers' eyes to the non-obvious in a relentless quest for intimate and cohesive humanism.
