RAN HWANG : LA VOIE DE LA BEAUTÉ

Le travail de l'Artiste Ran Hwang, avec ces images évoquant les cerisiers en fleur, les perles brillantes et les oiseaux de cristaux multicolores, suscite immédiatement un sentiment de beauté profonde chez le spectateur. Mais à mesure que le spectateur se rapproche, l'oeuvre se décompose devant les yeux et livre ses différents niveaux de lecture à travers un enchevêtrement de boutons de couture montés sur des épingle à piquer.

Ainsi de la gracieuse composition du départ surgit une série de questions complexes sur le genre, la religion, le temps. Les multiples niveaux de lecture traduisent une attitude de défi de l'Artiste, de questionnement, un jeu de miroirs qui fait mieux ressortir les questions soulevées.

Née à Pusan, Ran Hwang a étudié la peinture à l'Université de Chung Ang à Séoul, avant de déménager à New York en 1997 pour entrer à l'École d'Arts Visuels. Après ses études, elle a travaillé pour une courte période dans un atelier de broderie qui lui a donné accès à des boîtes entières de boutons inutilisés, un medium qu'elle s'est rapidement mise à intégrer dans son travail. Et bien que l'artiste ait à l'origine utilisé ces matériaux industriels pour leur facilité d'accès, son expérience en matière de confection de vêtements est venue nourrir ses références au travail manuel, à la féminité et au savoir-faire. À petits coups de marteau, Ran Hwang enfonce des clous, des perles et des fils d'un geste répétitif qui renvoie à la gestuelle analogue de millions de femmes employées dans les usines de vêtements de toute l'Asie. En déconstruisant l'attrait exercé par l'industrie de la mode, son recours à des matériaux ordinaires dans des œuvres d'une grande beauté restitue ainsi le contraste entre l'effort du simple travailleur et le prestige du produit fini.

Par ailleurs, le travail de Ran Hwang parle avec pertinence du rôle de l'artisanat dans les traditions orientales par opposition à la conception de l'art en Occident. Les concepts de savoir-faire et de beauté font partie de l'esthétique orientale depuis longtemps et se rencontrent dans l'art, l'imagerie religieuse et la vie quotidienne. À l'inverse, l'art moderne occidental a rejeté les représentations de la beauté au profit d'une description plus crue et « réaliste » de la condition humaine. Vu sous l'angle du rapport entre les sexes, l'Occident a longtemps dénigré les activités relevant du travail dit « féminin », telles que le perlage et la broderie, et ce n'est que depuis peu qu'on assiste à un renouveau de ces pratiques, sous l'influence de voix de femmes et de réalisations artistiques comme celles de Ran Hwang.

Ran Hwang tire une partie de ses influences de son éducation bouddhiste, comme en témoignent ses choix de sujet – l'harmonie hypnotique des fleurs de cerisiers, des oiseaux en plein vol, des dragons et de l'architecture bouddhiste. Mais ces enseignements spirituels sont aussi mis en avant dans son processus de création lui-même. Au cours des quatre mois parfois nécessaires à la création minutieuse de chaque panneau, le procédé laborieux et répétitif auquel Ran Hwang se consacre avec opiniâtreté devient ainsi une forme de méditation. En fixant des milliers de perles, fils, boutons et épingle sur des plaques de plexiglas, l'artiste entre alors dans un état de réflexion contemplative sur le déclin, la renaissance et la nature cyclique des choses. Dissimulé derrière les différentes épaisseurs d'un travail riche et laborieux, l'art de Ran Hwang révèle la beauté qui réside dans l'envers du décor.

Par leur présence imposante, ces œuvres submergent le spectateur tout en exigeant de lui introspection et émerveillement face au savoir-faire impeccable de l'artiste. Ran Hwang navigue sans effort entre deux sphères de l'expérience universelle, enrichissant son travail d'une grande capacité d'adaptation sociale, anthropologique et politique – un petit bouton de plastique après l'autre.

RAN HWANG: THE POLITICS OF BEAUTY

With images evocating blossomed cherry trees, glossy beads and multi-coloured crystal birds, the work of artist Ran Hwang inspires an immediate feeling of deep beauty within the viewer. But as these get closer, the artwork decomposes in front of them and reveals several levels of understanding through an entanglement of sawing buttons mounted on headpins.

Thus from the elegant composition of the start arises a succession of complex interrogations on gender, religion and time. The multiple levels of reading of her works demonstrate the artist's challenging attitude and the play of mirrors she uses to highlight her interrogations.

Born in Pusan, Ran Hwang trained as a painter at Chung Ang University in Seoul before moving to New York in 1997 to attend the School of Visual Arts. After her studies, she worked briefly in an embroidery design studio where she gained access to boxes of surplus buttons, a material she promptly began incorporating in her work. While her impetus to use the mass-produced materials was initially related to accessibility, Ran Hwang's experience in garment production became a catalyst for her references to labour, femininity and craftsmanship. Her repetitive practice of hammering thousands of nails, beads and thread reflects on similar activities performed by millions of women working in garment factories throughout Asia. Unraveling the allure of the fashion industry, her use of common materials to create magnificent works mirrors the labour of the ordinary human against the glamour of the finished product.

Moreover, Ran Hwang's work brings up relevant discourse about the role of craft in Eastern traditions versus Western approaches to art. The concept of craftsmanship and beauty have long been integral to Eastern traditions; intersecting in art, religious imagery and lifestyle. In contrast, Modern art in the west eschewed depictions of beauty in exchange for a grittier, more "realistic" expression of the human condition. From a gendered perspective, the west's denigration of practices considered "women's work", such as beading and embroidery, has only recently begun to experience a resurgence as a result of feminine discourse and artistic practice such as Ran Hwang's.

Ran Hwang's mix of influences includes that of her Buddhist upbringing. Evidenced in her subject matter - the mesmerising harmony of cherry blossoms, birds in flight, dragons and Buddhist architecture - Buddhist teachings are also highlighted in the process of creation itself. Taking up to four months at a time on each meticulously constructed panel, Ran Hwang's intensively laborious and repetitive practice becomes a form of meditation. Affixing thousands of beads, threads, buttons and pins onto board or plexiglass, the artist enters a state of quite contemplation on the nature of cyclicity, decay and rebirth. Concealed under layers of multifaceted labour, Ran Hwang's work reveals the beauty to be found on the other side of the coin.

Her works overwhelm the viewer with their presence while demanding introspection and awe for her impeccable craftsmanship. She flows effortlessly between two realms of universal experience, elevating her work to the capacity for social, anthropological and political change. One plastic bead at a time.

BIOGRAPHY

Born in the Republic of Korea in 1960, Ran Hwang lives and works in both Seoul and New York City. She studied Fine Arts at the School of Visual Arts in New York City and attended the Graduate School of Fine Arts at Chung-Ang University in Seoul.

Ran Hwang's motifs of blossoms, birds, and palaces come from her preoccupation with the nature of cyclical life, non-visibility and the beauty of transient moment. Additionally, Zen Buddhism plays a part in her creative process. Creating hand-made paper buttons and hammering each pin approximately 25 times until it is secure are time-consuming tasks. The monotony and receptiveness of these actions require the upmost concentration and discipline, recalling the meditative state practiced by Zen masters.

Ran Hwang has exhibited at several international institutions including the Queens Museum of Art, New York; MASS MoCA (Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art), Massachusetts; IMAS (International Museum of Art and Science), Texas; Third Floor-Hermès, Singapore; UNESCO Headquarters, Paris; The Hudson Valley Center for the Arts, New York; The Seoul Arts Center Museum; and The Jeju Museum of Art, Jeju Island. Ran Hwang's work is also a part of numerous private and public collections including The Brooklyn Museum, New York; The Des Moines Center for the Arts, Iowa; The National Museum of Contemporary Art, Seoul; and The Hammond Museum, North Salem, NY King County Library in Issaquah, WA, USA.

She received a grant from Pollock Krasner Foundation in 2015. She has earned numerous residencies and awards including MASS MoCA Residency Program, MA; Artist in Residency, International Museum of Art and Science (IMAS), Texas; Full Fellowship, Vermont Studio Center Residency Program, Vermont; Gold Prize, AHL Foundation (Korean American), Annual Arts Competition, New York.

Ran Hwang dit : - « Mon travail est divisé en deux groupes. Dans le premier, les épingle sont utilisées pour tenir les boutons tout en restant mobiles. Je choisis d'utiliser des boutons qui sont aussi communs et « ordinaires » que les êtres humains. Ces boutons sont entravés par les limites imposées entre la paroi et la tête d'épingle, ils suggèrent la tension entre le désir humain pour la liberté et les limitations imposées par la société. Dans le second groupe, un nombre considérable d'épingles connectent des mètres de fil, créant un espace négatif des images présentées, les fils suggèrent les connections et les relations complexes entre les êtres humains. L'espace négatif, rempli par l'absence d'image positive, évoque la vacuité de notre propre existence».

("L'évolution créatrice").

Ran Hwang: « My works fall into two groups. In the first group, pins hold buttons that remain free to move between the surface of the wall and the pinhead. The constricted movement of the button, an everyday object as numerous and “ordinary” as people, as it is caught within the confines imposed by the wall and the pinhead, suggests the tension between the human desire for freedom and the limitations imposed by society. In the second group, countless pins are connected by yards of thread that create a negative space from the resultant image. The threads suggest the complex relations amongst human society while the negative space defined by the thousands of thread lines represents a void in the meaning of personal existence. »

« The body's individuality is absorbed by the universal interaction that is, undoubtedly, reality itself », Henri Bergson replies.
("The creative evolution")
