The year 2023 marked a significant milestone in the international recognition of the Spanish artist Juan Genovés (1930-2020). Opera Gallery announced its representation of the estate of this emblematic figure in the modern history of his country, already acknowledged by the world's leading artistic institutions. It is with immense pride, therefore, that we host the artist's first solo exhibition in Paris, titled "Ágora".

Juan Genovés and his art emerged under the oppressive yoke of the Franco dictatorship (1939-1975). Initially informal, the artist's commitment to freedom led him to join significant groups in Spain's post-war scene. In the 1960s, Genovés turned towards figurative art, developing an expressionist and provocative painting style, before moving towards collage in the following decade and embracing political realism. His most popular work, El Abrazo (The Embrace), commissioned in 1976 for the amnesty of political prisoners of the time, has even become a symbol of the Spanish democratic transition (1975-1982). This work, with its universal message, also embodies the reconciliation of Spaniards who fought during those years of dictatorship. Now a national emblem, the painting has been on permanent display in the Congress building in Madrid since 2016.

Until the end of his life, Juan Genovés remained faithful to his political ideals. His deep commitment to democracy and social justice, and his opposition to the Franco regime, gave rise to the two main themes of his work: the individual and the crowd. The artist thus questions the mechanisms of dictatorship by opposing these two notions. The "Ágora" exhibition, the second part of the show staged in our Singapore gallery last November, brings together some twenty works dating from 2006

L'année 2023 a marqué une étape importante dans la reconnaissance internationale de l'artiste espagnol Juan Genovés (1930-2020). Opera Gallery a annoncé la représentation de la succession de cette figure emblématique de l'histoire moderne de son pays, déjà reconnue par les plus grandes institutions artistiques dans le monde. C'est donc avec une immense fierté que nous accueillons la première exposition personnelle de l'artiste à Paris, intitulée Ágora.

Juan Genovés et son art sont nés sous le joug oppressif de la dictature franquiste (1939-1975). Plutôt informel à ses débuts, l'engagement de l'artiste pour la liberté l'a conduit à rejoindre des groupes importants de la scène de l'après-guerre espagnole. Dans les années 1960, Genovés devient figuratif et développe alors une peinture expressionniste et provocatrice, avant de s'orienter la décennie suivante vers le collage et d'embrasser le réalisme politique. Son œuvre la plus populaire, El Abrazo (L'étreinte), commandée en 1976 pour l'amnistie des prisonniers politiques de l'époque, est même devenue un symbole de la transition démocratique espagnole (1975-1982). Cette œuvre au message universel est aussi l'incarnation de la réconciliation des Espagnols qui ont combattu durant ces années de dictature. Devenu un emblème national, le tableau est exposé depuis 2016 de manière permanente dans le bâtiment du Congrès à Madrid. Jusqu'à la fin de sa vie, Juan Genovés est resté fidèle à ses idéaux politiques. Son engagement profond pour la démocratie et la justice sociale, et son opposition au régime franquiste ont donné naissance aux deux thèmes principaux de son œuvre : l'individu et la foule. L'artiste questionne ainsi les mécanismes de la dictature en opposant ces deux notions.

to the artist's death in 2020, as well as a series of metal sculptures dating from 2004.

Genovés' works, seemingly simple, almost abstract, actually hide a more complex reading. As one gets closer, each character is unique in attitude, with the use of real clothing and objects directly glued onto the canvas. The individual becomes myriad, evolving in a bird's-eye, almost cinematic vision. A silent crowd, a dispersed crowd, locked in, kept at bay, projected as miniature shadows. In Genovés' hands, the human mass becomes an anonymous, recurring product of history. Power, persecution, resistance and displacement are some of the eternal themes of an œuvre that continues to move the viewer.

These compositions, devoid of any contextual clues, are charged with ambiguity when it comes to movement and motivation. Looking at them, we inevitably think of barriers, images of political or ideological borders that the artist prefers not to reveal. Undoubtedly, Genovés speaks to us of the post-Franco uprisings, but also of more contemporary popular insurrections for democratic freedom.

This exhibition showcases the humanist and poetic legacy that Juan Genovés leaves behind, as well as a message of universal significance. In his almost obsessive exploration of the vertigo of the human condition, Genovés also sought to transform art into an artist's commitment to society.

We would like to extend our warmest thanks to the family of Juan Genovés for their trust and assistance, without which this exhibition would not have been possible.

L'exposition Ágora, second volet de l'accrochage réalisé dans notre galerie de Singapour en novembre dernier, réunie ainsi une vingtaine d'œuvres datées entre 2006 et le décès de l'artiste en 2020, ainsi qu'une série de sculptures en métal datant de 2004. Ses toiles d'apparence simple, presque abstraites, cachent en réalité une lecture plus complexe. Lorsque l'on se rapproche, chaque personnage est unique tant dans son attitude que dans l'usage de vêtements et d'objets réels collés directement sur la toile. L'individu devient une myriade, évoluant dans une vision à vol d'oiseau quasi cinématographique. Une foule silencieuse, une foule dispersée, enfermée, mise au pas, projetée sous forme d'ombres miniatures. Entre les mains de Genovés, la masse humaine devient un produit anonyme et récurrent de l'histoire. Le pouvoir, la persécution, la résistance ou le déplacement sont quelques-uns des thèmes éternels d'une œuvre qui continue d'émouvoir le spectateur.

Ces compositions dépourvues de tout indice contextuel sont chargées d'ambiguïté quant au mouvement et à la motivation. En les regardant nous pensons inévitablement à des barrières, des images de frontières politiques ou idéologiques que l'artiste préfère ne pas révéler. Incontestablement, Genovés nous parle de l'effervescence après Franco, mais aussi des soulèvements populaires plus contemporains à travers le monde pour la liberté démocratique.

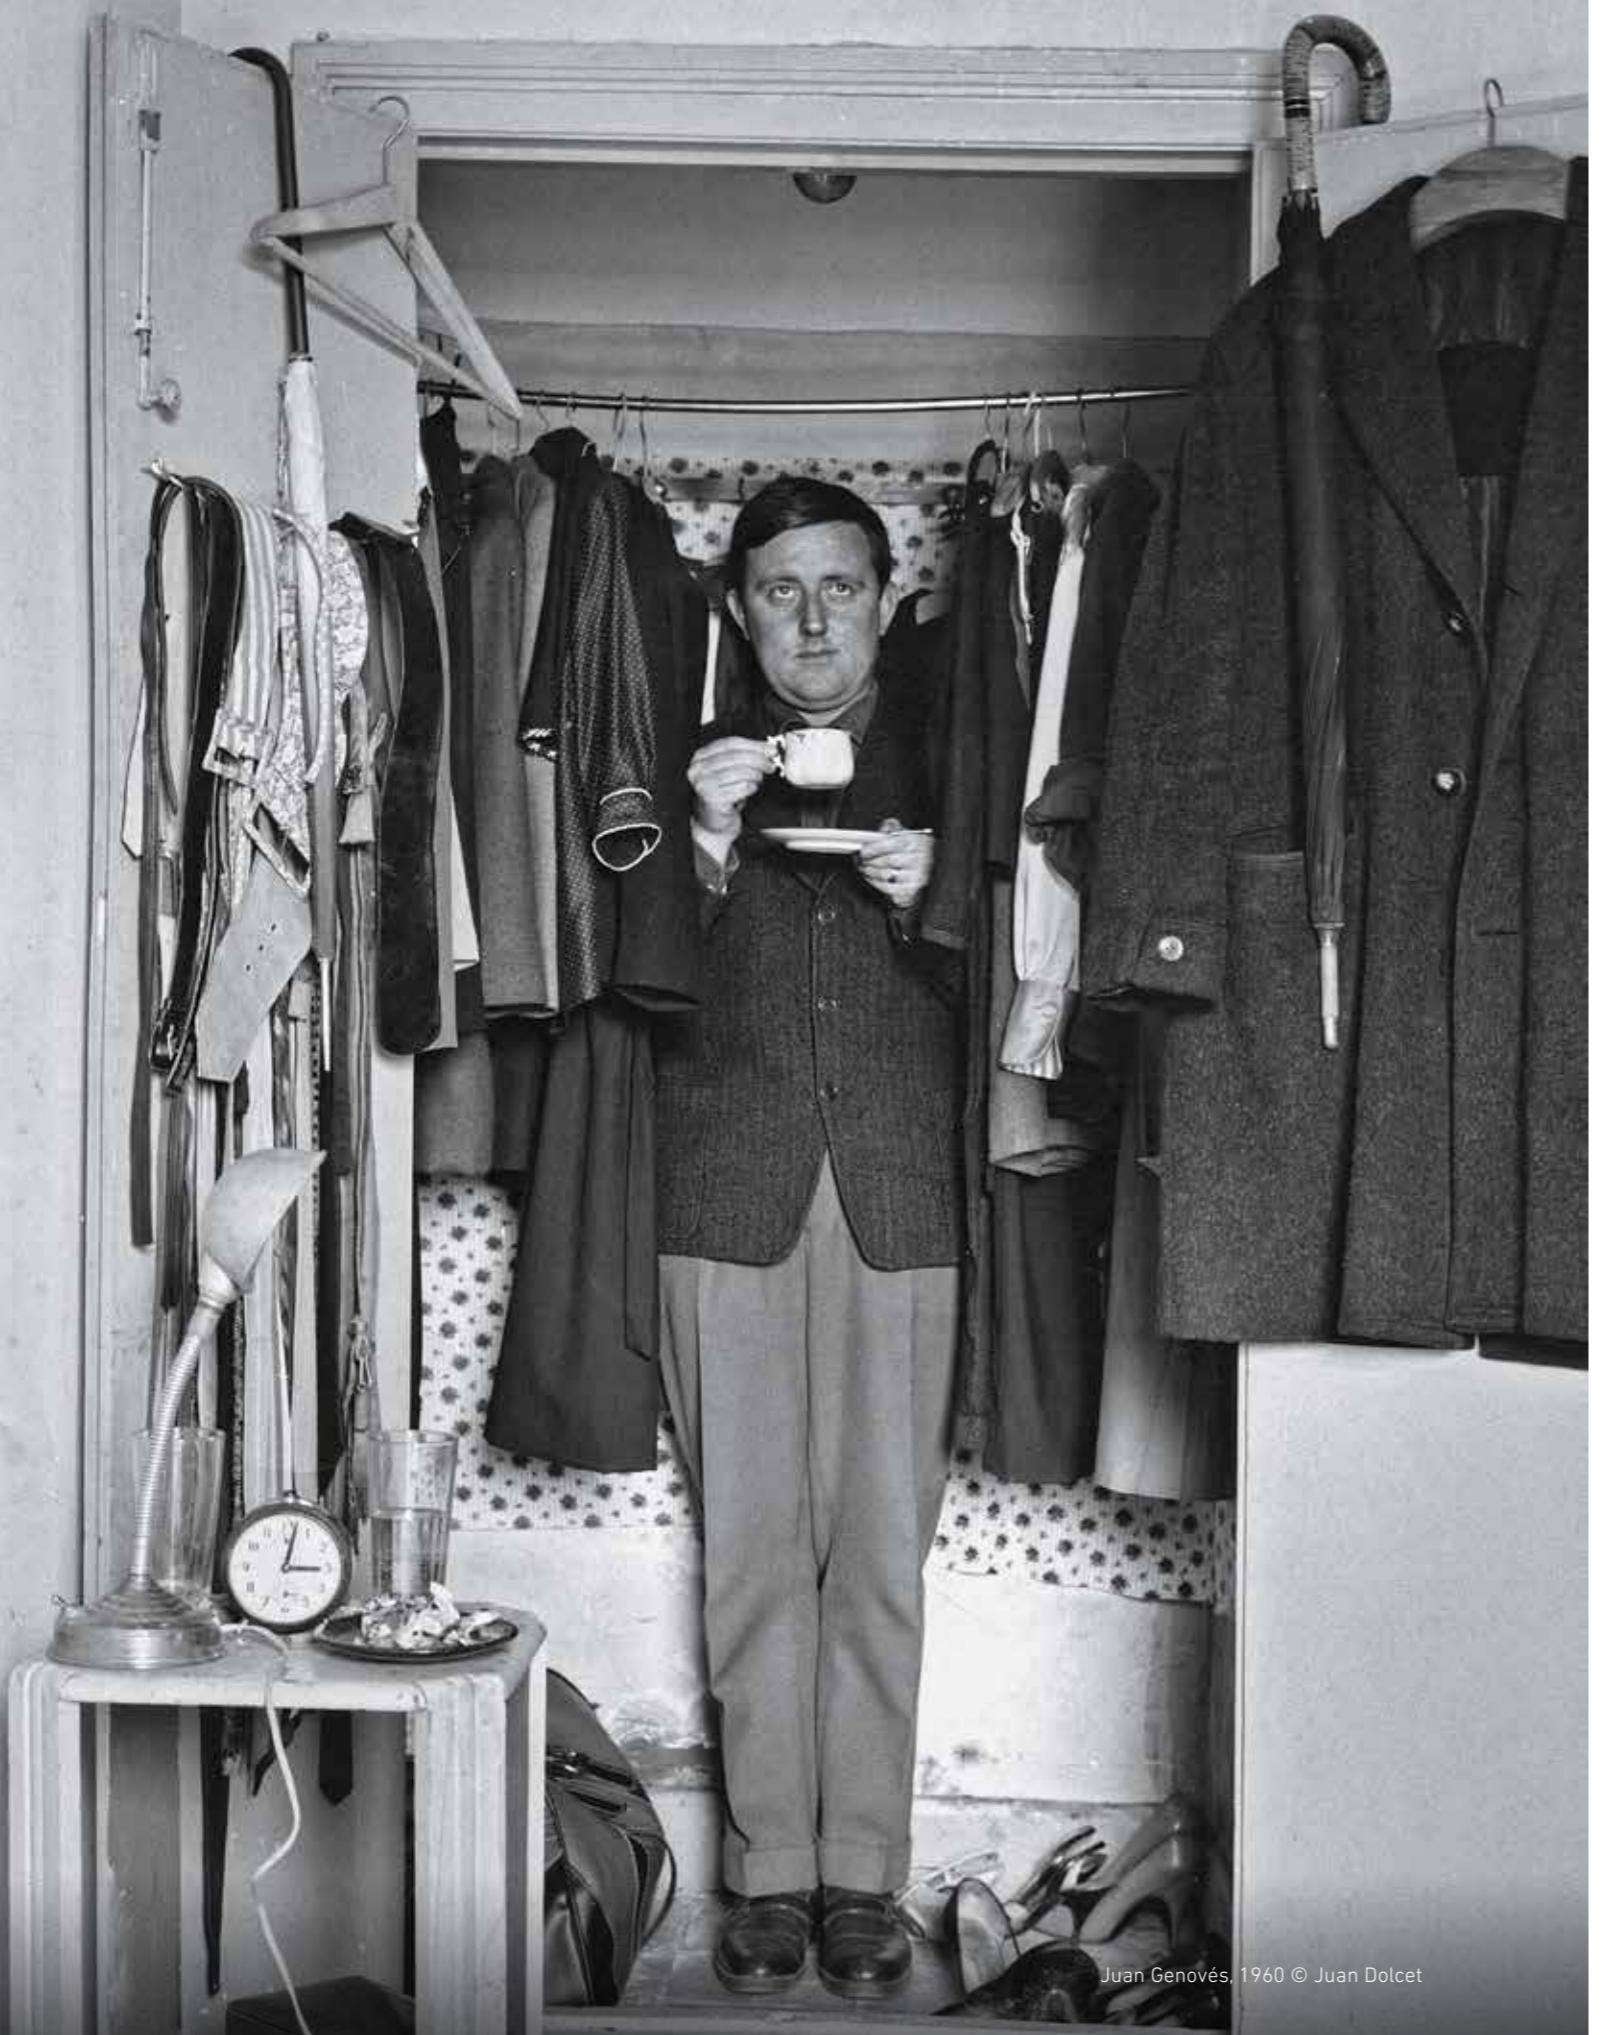

Cette exposition permet de montrer l'héritage humaniste et poétique que Juan Genovés laisse derrière lui ainsi qu'un message d'une portée universelle. En explorant de manière quasi obsessionnelle ce vertige de la condition humaine, Genovés a également cherché à transformer l'art en un engagement de l'artiste envers la société.

Nous tenons à remercier chaleureusement la famille de Juan Genovés pour sa confiance et son assistance sans lesquelles cette exposition n'aurait pas été possible.

I have to admit that every time I come across one of your works, I can hear your voice saying: "Hey! How's it going?". And, as ever, with your friendly, cheerful face and shy smile, the way I always remember you. Those were the words you greeted me with when we first met over twenty years ago, and it was also the last thing you said to me. How I miss your perennial good humour, your youthful bearing, always at ease, happy, fulfilled and sincere.

And that "it" was life itself. Looking at it through your eyes you made me think everything was so simple ... coming from someone like yourself who had so much experience and who had overcome so many heartaches, you kept on confronting life fearlessly and with a smile on your face; always head on, looking it straight in the eye, one to one, with your boundless good nature.

Entering the fray like hand-to-hand combat, the same way as you tackled the blank canvas, with your consummate control of perspective; therein the horizon which always cuts across the surface of your painting, yet at once faraway in the distance. And then there is your bird's-eye view, never missing the tiniest detail, almost reminding me of a photojournalist's gaze in the eye of the storm. With you, one could claim that art is always political, because ultimately life itself is political, whether we wish to acknowledge it or not. Your paintings were works of social commitment, your brushwork, like what you said about Goya, was a brushwork of protest, and your painting, like his, crying out in apparent silence at every moment. That nonconformity was yours too, my dearest Juan. You, like him, painting and at once protesting, standing up to the powers-that-be.

Désormais, à chaque fois que je fais face à l'une de tes œuvres, je t'entends : « Alors, comment ça va ? » Toujours le même visage accueillant, toujours le même sourire espiègle et cette pudeur caractéristique qui t'habitait en toute occasion. C'est ainsi que je me souviendrai toujours de toi. Ces mots simples furent les premiers que tu m'aies adressés lorsque nous nous sommes rencontrés, il y a plus de vingt ans. Et ce furent également les derniers. Cette voix joviale me manque tant, cette bonne humeur caractéristique, qui te traduisait heureux, accompli, authentique.

C'était la vie auprès de toi, en tout évidence. Tu avais cette manière singulière de la rendre simple et facile. Toi, qui avais traversé bien des épreuves, tu continuais de voir chaque jour avec le sourire, sans peur, sans attente et sans déception. Tu regardais la vie en face, les yeux dans les yeux, avec une bienveillance manifeste.

Mais dans la lutte aussi, comme à chaque fois que tu affrontais la toile vierge, armé de ta maîtrise absolue de la perspective, du point de vue. L'horizon délimitait la surface de ton art, mais restait à distance. Ton regard d'aigle, capturant chaque détail, était comme celui d'un reporter au cœur de la tempête. Avec toi, l'art s'affirmait comme objet politique, car la vie, qu'on le veuille ou non, est intrinsèquement politique. Tes œuvres étaient des vœux sociaux ; ta manière de peindre, comme celle que tu attribuais à Goya, une protestation. Et tout comme lui, en silence, tu hurlais ton mécontentement, Juan. Peignant et dénonçant, tu te dressais contre l'ordre établi.

I was born the same year as the first democratic government in Spain, and as such I can acknowledge the commitment and the risk you ran in your paintings from the sixties and seventies, works of resistance and protest by a citizen with integrity. Thanks to your exhibitions abroad, the trauma of the dictatorship in Spain was known beyond our borders. In your works you reflected the repression of Franco's regime, persecution by the armed police, the annihilation of other voices. The crowd was already there, back then, running away alarmed, with everything always seen from a bird's-eye view. Your paintings from the seventies are basically incredibly realist, portraits of innocent victims, anonymous portraits of people for which you used your own family and friends.

As someone who grew up with democracy and did not have to suffer the atrocities of the dictatorship, your Abrazo from 1976, which became the icon of harmony and brotherhood of all Spaniards, has always struck me as a work of consensus and of unity. I remember with a smile your story about how it, "the Guernica of the Transition"¹, now considered a historical symbol, returned to Spain.

And then came your paintings from the eighties, your cityscapes from between 1983 and 1985, often uninhabited, when even the texturized desert-like surfaces seemed to be suffused with a certain sense of distrust or taking a step backwards to contemplate and assimilate the new reality: from terror to isolation, the most disturbing of solitudes. And from there to your sequences from the nineties, where the crowds began to run with impastoed paint, still with scant use of colour.

I remember the day after the Epiphany in early January 2005 when Francisco Calvo Serraller² and I paid you a visit. We arrived before the appointed time so we went to a nearby cafeteria to have tea. Francisco whiled away the time telling me well-known stories about your younger and also your later years. When we climbed

1. The period in Spain's recent history, roughly between 1975 and 1978, when the country transitioned from the dictatorship of Franco's regime to a constitutional democracy.

2. Francisco Calvo Serraller (1948-2018) was a Spanish Doctor (PhD) in Art History, essayist, critic and professor. He was the director of the Prado museum in Madrid between 1993 and 1994, and was a member of the San Fernando Royal Academy of Fine Arts since 2001.

Née l'année de la première Législature, je perçois l'engagement et le risque que tu prenais dans tes peintures des années 1960 et 1970, témoignages de la résistance et de la critique d'un citoyen droit et intègre. Par tes expositions à l'étranger, tu témoignais du drame de la dictature espagnole au-delà de nos frontières. Tes œuvres reflétaient la répression du régime franquiste, la persécution, l'annihilation. La foule, déjà présente dans tes œuvres à cette époque, fuyait, terrifiée, toujours vue d'en haut. Fondamentalement, tes toiles des années 1970 sont des œuvres d'un réalisme profond, portraits d'innocents capturés, visages anonymes du peuple, souvent ceux de ta famille et de tes amis.

Enfant de la démocratie n'ayant pas eu à subir les outrages du dictateur, ton Abrazo (Étreinte) de 1976, devenu icône d'union et de fraternité entre les Espagnols, m'a toujours semblé une œuvre de consensus et d'unité. Je souris en me rappelant comment tu racontais le retour de ce « Guernica de la Transition »¹, aujourd'hui symbole historique pour toute l'Espagne.

Puis vinrent tes paysages urbains de 1983 à 1985, souvent vides, jusqu'à ces étendues aux textures de désert, où l'on discerne une certaine méfiance, ou peut-être un pas de côté pour mieux observer et assimiler cette nouvelle réalité : de l'horreur à l'isolement, celle d'une interminable solitude. Et puis il y a eu tes séquences des années 1990, où les foules commençaient à s'animer dans une peinture matérielle, encore peu colorée.

Je me remémore encore de ce jour, après l'Épiphanie de 2005, où, accompagné de Francisco Calvo Serraller², nous sommes venus te rendre visite dans ton studio. Arrivés tôt, nous avions patienté en prenant un thé au bistrot de la place près de chez toi. Francisco évoquait avec nostalgie tes années de jeunesse, comme les plus récentes. Lorsque, en grimpant les dix-huit marches menant à ton atelier (tu les comptais chaque matin !), the eighteen steps to your studio (the ones you counted every day), we saw all of a sudden in one fell swoop all your new paintings scattered about the space; we looked at each other in surprise and ended up being carried along with you in the contagious sensuality that was already beginning to impregnate your work.

As fate would have it, one of the works that hypnotized us that day was the colossal "Bordeando" (2006) which we are now exhibiting in your first solo show at Opera Gallery Singapore after proudly announcing that we are representing your estate internationally—what a great honour for us.

That day we also saw your "Enrejados", those whimsical sculptures, which can also be seen in this show, that allowed light to filter through their cut-out silhouettes and create crowds on the paint-splattered floor of your studio.

You added body and colour to your individuals in motion, a play of shadows and perspective conceived so ingeniously in each work. You gradually incorporated objects and photographs, sometimes even your own. The crowd, your highly personal language, is still there, adapted to another historical and personal moment. You were plethoric, happy with your new direction, as one can plainly see in the joyfulness of your "Canales I" (2015) or "Correlaciones" (2017).

And always your bird's-eye view; right from the very beginning you boldly challenged the convention of frontal theory in the history of painting. The other day when your son Pablo and I were looking at "Vislumbre" (2017)—on view in Opera Gallery Madrid's inaugural exhibition—we lingered to discover recognizable forms among the crowds, as if they were clouds and we were engrossed looking at the sky. I was reminded of The Baron in the Trees, the novel by Italo Calvino, one of my favourite authors, in which he constructed a wonderful fable about remaining true to your principles: at the age of twelve, Cosimo Piovasco courageously decided to take on the challenge of living in the trees where he remained until death finally caught up with him in his old age, because "anyone who wants to see the earth properly must keep himself at a necessary distance from it." Now, Juan, up above, always with a bird's-eye view, you will continue painting life.

nous avons découvert en un coup d'œil tes dernières créations. Un choc. Nous avons échangé des regards, surpris puis émerveillés de l'envoutante atmosphère qui se dégageait de tes œuvres.

C'est incroyable de penser que l'imposante Bordeando (Frontière, 2006), l'une des œuvres qui nous avait tant émus ce jour-là, se retrouve à l'affiche de ta première exposition monographique à Opera Gallery Singapour juste après que nous ayons annoncé notre représentation internationale de ton héritage. Quel honneur !

Il y avait aussi tes Enrejados (Treillis), ces sculptures fantaisistes — que l'on retrouve également dans cette exposition — qui, traversées par la lumière, recréaient des foules naviguant parmi les éclaboussures de peinture du sol de ton atelier.

À tes figures en mouvement, tu as donné corps et couleur, jouant si finement avec les ombres et la perspective... Tu leur as offert objets et photos, parfois même les tiennes. La foule, ton langage si singulier, persiste, adapté à un autre moment historique et personnel. Tu étais au sommet de ton art, en pleine possession de cette nouvelle direction, comme en témoignent la joie sans limite de tes Canales I (Canaux I, 2015) ou Correlaciones (Correlations, 2017).

Et toujours cette vue d'en haut. Car depuis tes premières œuvres, tu as bravé la tradition de la perspective frontale en peinture. Récemment, avec ton fils Pablo, nous admirions Vislumbre (Aperçu, 2017) — présenté à l'inauguration d'Opera Gallery Madrid — et nous nous amusions à identifier certaines figures familières parmi les foules, comme si nous cherchions des formes dans les nuages. Je me remémore le roman Le Baron perché d'Italo Calvino, qui raconte la fidélité à ses principes à travers une magnifique fable : Cosimo Piovasco à 12 ans, choisit de vivre sa vie dans les arbres, jusqu'à ce que la mort le rattrape des années plus tard. Selon lui, « pour bien voir la terre, il faut se tenir à une distance suffisante. » Aujourd'hui, Juan, du haut de ton perchoir céleste, tu continues à peindre la vie.

ABOUT JUAN GENOVÉS

A PROPOS DE JUAN GENOVÉS

SIMON DE PURY

It is with excitement that I heard from Gilles Dyan, the brilliant Founder and Chairman of Opera Gallery, that they had now the worldwide representation of the estate of Juan Genovés. Opera Gallery which has one of the largest networks of galleries around the globe will allow this important artist to get the wide recognition that his work deserves.

It is as a teenager that I first came across the work of Juan Genovés. While leafing thru the pages of an art magazine I was instantly struck by the power emanating from the images of his art.

It is the participation of the Spanish artist in the 33rd Venice Biennale in 1966 that put Juan Genovés on the map. It is there that he got his first international exposure and success. He obtained the Jury's Honourable Mention and was taken onto the roster of the Marlborough Gallery which included artists such as Mark Rothko or Francis Bacon. This gave Genovés from one moment to another an international platform and access to collectors and institutions from all over the world. This situation was in sharp contrast with what the artist was experiencing in his homeland Spain. Having gone thru the horrendous years of the Civil War, Spain was under the firm grip of the fascist dictatorship of General Franco. The art of Juan Genovés, son of working class parents with communist sympathies, was regarded very suspiciously by the authorities and all doors were shut to him in his homeland. This only changed with the advent of democracy in the late 1970's when the socially engaged art of Genovés was seen as having contributed towards bringing an end to fascism.

C'est avec enthousiasme que j'ai appris de Gilles Dyan, le brillant fondateur et président d'Opera Gallery, qu'ils avaient désormais la représentation mondiale de l'œuvre de Juan Genovés. Opera Gallery, qui possède l'un des plus grands réseaux de galeries à travers le monde, permettra à cet important artiste d'obtenir la large reconnaissance que son œuvre mérite.

C'est à l'adolescence que j'ai découvert l'œuvre de Juan Genovés. En feuilletant les pages d'un magazine d'art, j'ai été instantanément frappé par la puissance émanant de son art.

C'est sa participation à la 33^e Biennale de Venise en 1966 qui a fait connaître Juan Genovés. C'est là qu'il a connu sa première exposition internationale et son premier succès. Il obtient la mention honorable du jury et est inscrit sur la liste de la Marlborough Gallery, qui compte des artistes tels que Mark Rothko ou Francis Bacon. Cela a immédiatement conféré à Genovés, une plate-forme internationale et l'accès à des collectionneurs et des institutions du monde entier. Cette situation contrastait fortement avec ce que l'artiste vivait dans son pays d'origine, l'Espagne. Après avoir traversé les terribles années de la guerre civile, l'Espagne était sous l'emprise de la dictature fasciste du général Franco. L'art de Juan Genovés, fils de parents issus de la classe ouvrière ayant des sympathies communistes, était considéré avec méfiance par les autorités et toutes les portes lui étaient fermées dans son pays. Cette situation n'a changé qu'avec l'avènement de la démocratie à la fin des années 1970, lorsque l'art socialement engagé de Genovés a été considéré comme ayant contribué à mettre fin au fascisme.

Genovés distinguishes himself from most artists from his own generation both in stylistic terms and thru his subject matter of predilection. He was totally fascinated by the dynamics that occur when big crowds of people get together whether for political manifestations, sporting events or corridas. Large movements of people could have something disquieting and occasionally scary about them. Being part of a larger crowd emboldens individuals who feel more brave as they are more anonymous when part of the masses. This anonymity and feeling of being lost in the crowd can also enhance a sense of loneliness. One is sometimes never more lonely than in a large city or in the middle of a crowd.

The activism of the artist certainly played a role in the choice of his subject matter. From a formalistic point of view the art of Genovés is unique. He had been exposed to a lot of informal art which was predominant in the 1950's and to a large degree still in the 1960's despite the advent of Pop Art. He derived much more inspiration from cinema and photography than he did from the art of his contemporaries. He singularly combined figuration from these media with dramatic compositions that were influenced by some informal and abstract art.

One of Madrid's most striking public artworks is the Monument to the Atocha Lawyers. It is a sculpture based on one of Genovés's most famous paintings El Abrazo and serves as a memorial to the victims of the 1977 Atocha massacre when several lawyers and a trade unionist linked to the communist party were shot by fascist gunmen. This commission contributed making the art of Genovés very much part of the public consciousness going way beyond the art world.

At a time when the world at large is sadly becoming more polarised again the art of Juan Genovés is as relevant as ever. The bold graphic impact of his canvases is as strong and vibrant today as it was when it first caught my eye. I am delighted that, thanks to the Opera Gallery who now represents the estate of Juan Genovés, this important artist is also being discovered and appreciated by new generations.

Genovés se distingue de la plupart des artistes de sa génération à la fois par son style et par ses sujets de prédilection. Il était totalement fasciné par la dynamique qui se produit lorsque de grandes foules se rassemblent, que ce soit pour des manifestations politiques, des événements sportifs ou des corridas. Les grands mouvements de personnes peuvent avoir quelque chose d'inquiétant et parfois effrayant. Faire partie d'une grande foule enhardit les individus qui se sentent plus courageux car ils sont plus anonymes lorsqu'ils font partie de la masse. Cet anonymat et ce sentiment d'être perdu dans la masse peuvent également renforcer le sentiment de solitude. On n'est parfois jamais aussi seul que dans une grande ville ou au milieu d'un grand nombre de personnes.

L'activisme de l'artiste a certainement joué un rôle dans le choix de ses sujets. D'un point de vue formaliste, l'art de Genovés est unique. Il a été exposé au mouvement de l'art informel qui était prédominant dans les années 1950 et, dans une large mesure, encore dans les années 1960, malgré l'avènement du Pop Art. Il s'inspirait beaucoup plus du cinéma et de la photographie que de l'art de ses contemporains. Il a combiné de manière singulière la figuration issue de ces médias avec des compositions dramatiques influencées par l'art informel et l'art abstrait.

Le Monument aux avocats d'Atocha est l'une des œuvres d'art public les plus remarquables de la ville de Madrid. Il s'agit d'une sculpture inspirée de l'une de ses peintures les plus célèbres, El Abrazo, cette sculpture est un mémorial aux victimes du massacre d'Atocha de 1977, lorsque plusieurs avocats et un syndicaliste lié au parti communiste ont été abattus par des fascistes. Cette commande a contribué à faire entrer l'art de Genovés dans la conscience du public, bien au-delà du monde de l'art.

À l'heure où le monde dans son ensemble est malheureusement de plus en plus polarisé, l'art de Juan Genovés est plus que jamais d'actualité. L'impact graphique audacieux de ses toiles est aussi fort et vibrant aujourd'hui qu'il l'était lorsqu'il a attiré mon attention pour la première fois. Je suis ravi que, grâce à Opera Gallery qui représente désormais la succession de Juan Genovés, cet artiste important soit également découvert et apprécié par de nouvelles générations.

Juan Genovés in his studio during an interview with Manuel Vicent for El País, April 2019 © Jordi Socias Trained at the School of Fine Arts in Valencia, from the beginning of his professional career he was a restless painter, concerned both with the need to renew Spanish art and with the role of art and the artist in society.

His firm conviction about transforming art and commitment to the environment led him to form part of very significant groups in the post-war Spanish scene: "Los Siete" (1949), "Parpalló" (1956) and "Hondo" (1960). In this last group, which contributed new figurative approaches against Informalism, Genovés developed a painting of an expressionist and provocative nature.

In the 1960s, after a brief pictorial crisis and a deep relationship with the opposition movements to the Franco regime, he began to propose two themes: "the individual alone", initially resolved as a collage in relief, and "the multitude", treated with flat colors and plastic structures with a cinematographic appearance.

Over time, this last proposal materialized in a singular political realism of strong social denunciation, made from the manipulation of images provided by the mass media. In the eighties he began a new period in which he became interested in the urban landscape, reducing it to a chromatic range of grays, blues and ochres that constitute what has been called "spaces of solitude".

In the last decades of his life his work continued to use the crowd as a reference. The artistic and politico-social content of his work is developed together with a pictorial language based on the static movement of the image, its visual rhythm, and the use of background-figure contrast.

He was awarded the honorable mention at the XXXIII Venice Biennale (1966), the Gold medal at the VI San Marino International Biennale (1967), the Marzotto Internazionale award (1968), the National Prize for Plastic Arts (1984), the Prize for Plastic Arts from the Generalitat Valenciana (2002) and the gold medal for merit in Fine Arts from the Ministry of Culture (2005).

Genovés died on May 15, 2020. Until his last days he was doing what he was most passionate about: painting.

Formé à l'école des beaux-arts de Valence, il a été dès le début de sa carrière professionnelle un peintre très actif, préoccupé à la fois par la nécessité de renouveler l'art espagnol et par le rôle de l'art et de l'artiste dans la société.

Sa solide conviction de transformer l'art et son engagement en faveur de l'environnement l'ont amené à faire partie de groupes très importants de la scène espagnole de l'après-guerre : "Los Siete" (1949), "Parpalló" (1956) et "Hondo" (1960). Au sein de ce dernier groupe, qui a apporté de nouvelles approches figuratives contre l'Art Informel Genovés a développé une peinture de nature expressionniste et provocatrice.

Dans les années 1960, après une brève crise quant à son identité picturale et une relation intense avec les mouvements d'opposition au régime franquiste, il commence à explorer deux thèmes : "l'individu seul", d'abord conçu comme un collage en relief, et "la multitude", traitée avec des aplats de couleur et des structures plastiques d'apparence cinématographique.

Au fil du temps, cette dernière proposition s'est incarnée dans un réalisme politique singulier fait de forte dénonciation sociale, réalisée à partir de la manipulation d'images fournies par les médias de masse. Les années 1980 marquent une nouvelle période au cours de laquelle il s'intéresse au paysage urbain, le réduisant à une gamme chromatique de gris, de bleus et d'ocres qui constituent ce que l'on a appelé des "espaces de solitude".

Dans les dernières décennies de sa vie, la foule continue à constituer le point de référence de son œuvre. Le contenu artistique et politico-social de son œuvre est développé en même temps qu'un langage pictural basé sur le mouvement statique de l'image, son rythme visuel et l'utilisation du contraste entre l'arrière-plan et la figure.

Il a reçu la mention honorable à la XXXIIIe Biennale de Venise (1966), la médaille d'or à la VIe Biennale internationale de Saint-Marin (1967), le prix Marzotto Internazionale (1968), le prix national des arts plastiques (1984), le prix des arts plastiques de la Generalitat Valenciana (2002) et la médaille d'or du mérite des beaux-arts du ministère de la culture (2005).

Genovés est décédé le 15 mai 2020. Jusqu'à ses derniers jours, il faisait ce qui le passionnait le plus : peindre.
